THE SECOND MRS. LONDON

Charmian Kittredge Shares Her Life with Jack London

Marlo Faulkner

SAN FRANCISCO, SPRING OF 1900: Charmian Kittredge is an ambitious woman of twenty-nine, single, and unafraid to challenge the conventions of polite society. Her life will be forever changed when she accompanies her literary editor aunt to a luncheon to meet a young writer, Jack London, fresh from the Klondike and ready for fame. They experience instant chemistry.

Jack is charmed to discover that Charmian's intellect is as compelling as her beauty, and the attraction builds with each encounter, culminating in an invitation to a picnic date—one that Jack will break with the barest of notes announcing his marriage to another.

Yet social circles conspire to bring them back together, and the pair discover that time has done nothing to quell the attraction they feel. Charmian chooses to be in Jack's life no matter the consequences—becoming his friend, confidante, editor, lover—and eventually The Second Mrs. London.

A Scholar at the Huntington Library, Marlo Faulkner was the director of the annual Jack London Writers Conference and is on the Santa Barbara Writers Conference faculty. As a member of the Jack London Society, she has been a featured speaker at their International Biennial Symposia. She also holds membership in the Historical Novel Society of America, Women Writing the West, and the Central Coast branch of the California Writers Club.
